Jean Bach: Memories of Duke—and Other Jazz Greats

Jean Bach has been an advocate for jazz for most of her life. She met Duke

Ellington while she was a student at Vassar College and maintained long-time connections with him and with many other great figures of jazz.

Among other achievements, she is known for her documentary film A Great Day in Harlem, which celebrates Art Kane's making of the photograph of that name and an appreciation of the musicians in it. A new, enhanced edition of this documentary film will soon be available on DVD that includes additional commentary and biographical information about the musicians in the photo.

Jean Bach is a member of TDES, and we are delighted to welcome her back to reminisce about Duke and other musicians as well as to discuss the new edition of her documentary film.
